

The English Gardener; Or a Treatise on the Situation, Soil, Enclosing and Laying-Out of Kitchen Gardens Concluding With a Kalendar, Giving ... in Each Month of the Year (Classic Reprint)

ChAP. expense or trouble; and also, with the least risk of experiencing a disappointment of our hopes. 2. There must be, of necessity, numerous divisions of the matter, where subjects so numerous are to be treated of :and it is of great advantage to take a view of these several divisions before we enter upon the treatise. A nd, therefore, in this chapter, I shall endeavour to give the reader this view jso that he will see, not only what he is going to read about; but also the order in which the matter is intended to be brought before him. The SECOND Chapter of the work will describe that which I deem to be the properS ituation of a garden jnext, it will treat of theS oil, its nature, its preparation, and the general mode of manuring it, and of making provision of manure :next, of the Form of the Kitchen-G arden, and abo of the extent necessary under different circumstances :next, of the manner of Enclosing the Garden, and of theW alls and other Fences apphcable to the purpose. The Situation having been fixed on, theS oil prepared, the Form determined on, and the enclosures made, the next thing that will be presented to the reader will be the manner of laying out the ground within the enclosure, whether into plats, borders, or otherwise. 3. The THIRD Chapter will form a sort of Episode, disconnected with the general course of the work. It will treat of the managing of Hot-beds and Green houses Jthat is to say, it will treat of the management of things which are to be produced by artificial heat; and that are cultivated by rules exclusively adapted to this species of gardening. (Typographical errors above are due to OCR software and don't occur in the book.)
